R&D in the Construction Business...Really?

This is the question posed recently by FMI, a leading industry voice. Not surprisingly, the use of BIM (Building Information Modeling) in all of its capacities—3D, 4D and even 5D—topped the list of most respondents; in fact, BIM is so well-known that some don't see this as the cutting-edge anymore. Lean construction practices and prefabrication were also top mentions, indicating innovation is a combination of people skills and technologies. Here follow a few other worthy mentions:

- Enhanced use of electronic devices in the field to communicate in real time, allowing work flow to continue uninterrupted
- 3D printed components
- European formwork systems
- Safety innovations
- Informatics – the use of software and GIS to automate processes
- Robotic layout
- Laser scanning existing conditions to establish framework for 3D model for renovation projects
- Laser scans of installed MEP systems to create accurate as-built records
- Zero-energy buildings.

Food Processing Projects Hitting Stride

They say all things happen in cycles, and this has never been so obviously apparent with the levels of activity we are seeing in the South Jersey food processing arena. Two purveyors specifically have made major investments in South Jersey, Chelten House Products and Foodcomm International.

For more than half a century, Chelten House Products has prepared premier salad dressings and sauces, going to market under the Chelten House, Marinade Bay and Simply Natural brands. Meanwhile, Foodcomm International, headquartered in Australia, is a leader in providing the highest quality imported meats and meat byproducts throughout North America. Hutchinson is incredibly privileged to have been chosen as a partner in regionally significant, state-of-the-art projects for both companies.
